Social Media: More Harm Than Good The average Hong Kong teenager now spends close to six hours a day on social media. That time could have been spent sleeping, revising or simply talking to family. Social media is now ubiquitous, and _____ it promises connection, it quietly reshapes the way young people see themselves and one another. I firmly believe that social media does more harm than good to teenagers. _____, social media is detrimental to teenagers' mental health. Platforms are designed to reward comparison, _____ users are constantly shown polished photographs of other people's holidays and achievements, and pushed to measure their own lives against them. longer in doubt: according to the US Surgeon General’s 2023 advisory, adolescents who spend more than three hours a day on social media face double the risk of depression and anxiety. Day after day, this comparison erodes self-esteem and exacerbates anxiety — harm that is easy to miss _____ it feels normal. _____, the damage reaches beyond feelings into academic performance. Every notification leaves attention fragmented, making deep reading almost impossible to sustain. Late-night scrolling also delays sleep, which _____ undermines concentration in class. Governments have reached the same conclusion: France has restricted phones in its middle schools since 2018 and in 2024 trialled a “digital pause”, requiring pupils to hand in their phones for the whole school day. When the loss is measured in attention and sleep, convenience is a poor defence. _____ social media keeps teenagers connected and gives them a voice they would otherwise lack. _____, a group chat can help a class organise a project, and a niche interest may find community online. _____, these benefits are superficial when set against the costs. Consider what happens when a group chat becomes a teenager’s main company: the messages arrive all evening, every exchange stays on the surface, and real friendship is never attempted. A following built on ‘likes’ is rarely mutual support; at best, it is a short-lived substitute for friendship. _____, the convenience is real but modest, _____ the harm compounds year after year. _____, social media is not without value, _____ its effects on teenagers’ well-being, concentration and self-image plainly outweigh its benefits. Banning the technology would be counterproductive; the answer is a deliberate effort to curb the hours we spend online. If teenagers can learn to switch off, they will discover that the world beyond the screen deserves their attention.	• Round off Body 2 - Argument • Topic sentence • Explanation • Real-world case • Round off Body 3 - Counter-argument • Concede • Rebut • Typical process • Round off Conclusion • Restate stance • Summarise arguments • Final thought (408 words)
5. Language features — five reminders Both examples in each pair say the SAME thing. BOLD = persuasive language. Underlined = linking words. Fill in each blank with the upgraded word or phrase that the poor example needs.
